street hurried down to take station in vacant houses and redistrict the city. It was when the fire was at its worst that the crowd in Bleecker street, well west of Broadway, saw the wonderful rescue. The men of half a dozen engines had taken their hose up into the Manhattan building to light the flames across the street, but in spite of them, the fire got into the top floors of the building they were occupying. So they had to turn their fight against the flames above their own heads, and the men of the insurance patrols began to cover up everything in the the garbanzo, a bean a little larger building with their big rubber than the pea. Then the great leed was done. On the fifth floor of the building adjoining the Manhattan building the men of the fire patrols One and Two were at work. They heard the shout of the erowd, and looked out of the window. Through life's dull warp a woof it wove in shining colors of light and love; And the angels smiled as they watched In an instant they comprehended the peril of Fitzsimmons. The building they were in was older than the Manhattan, and the floors were not on the same level. Fitzsimmons, at his window, was three or four feet above them, and the Manhattan building projected out in front of their building almost a foot.

The window-ledge was too narrow and groping blindly through mists of tears to furnish footing, even for these steady-headed men of courage. Under Fitzsummon's window was a ledge five inches wide. By this be could reach the corner of his building if he had anything with which to steady nimself; but after that - what? Its touch was tender as angels' wings. But it rolled the stone from the hidden It took but a fraction of a second to decide. Under their narrow ledge, and wired stoutly to it, the insurance patrolmen saw a huge sign that ran across the face of the building. Out on that sign crawled John Rush of Patrol Two. Close behind, with his arms clasping Rush by the legs and steadying him, came James Barnett of Patrol One. As they inched along the big sign, their mates followed, each clasping the man ahead, and each steadied by the man behind жизмененения женини жизменений и жизмененений жизменений жизмении жизменений жизменений жизменений жизменений жизменений жизмении жизменений жизменений жизменений жизменений жизменений жизмении жизменений жизменений жизменений жизмений жизмени жизмении жизменений жизменений жизменений жизмении жизмени жизмений жизмени Thus the span of life was formed that reached at last the corner of the Man-

If that gave way, no power could save Fitzsimmons and his mates from terrible death on the flagging sixty feet below. But the sign held. Man by man they reached the window. Barnett was in, Rush was in, and at last Fitzsimmons. For an instant the assistant foreman stood at the window and bared his head.

Civil Service in China. Difficulties of the civil service examination are multiplied tenfold in the requirements set down by law of applicants for positions in the mail service of China. In the first place an applicant must have strength and courage. To acquire these he goes through a very queer method of training. He wanders through mountains and valleys, forests and caves. The exact time to be occupied in a trip is fixed by law and a heavy fine is imposed for unnecessary delay. He must repeat these trips at night, and if he listens to the bad spirit and thereby fails to appear at the required time at a certain place he is sure to lose his rights to a position. This is not all. He is obliged to carry an enormous weight for many miles and return with it within a given time. No allowance is made for his inability to defend himself against thieves and highwaymen, his read usually leading through a district thick with bandits.

In training the candidate eats very little-though he is used to this and he tries every straining exercise. Then correct his real e amination, nucler the tion of government officials. He is taken into a long room where, suspended from a high beam with strong r res are very heavy sacks filled with

A very active but a very timid snake is the pine or bull stake, deriving its name from its worderful bellowing note, much like that of a ball, produced by filling his body with air, which it noisily expels. This ranges east of the Mississippi river and south of the Ohio. It burrows holes in the ground into which it rapidly retreats when approached and emits a very sickening odor, thought to be a so t of defence. The odor is so sickening that one approaching the snake is very at to stop for a m ment to find out what it is, thus giving the snake time to retreat.

"REMEMBER THE MAINE!"

Captain Sigsbee Denies That the Navy Captain Sigsbee, writing of the destruction of his battleship in The Century, denies that "Remember the Maine!" was used as a motto by the navy in the late war with Spain. He also indicates a perfectly proper use of the phrase by patriotic Americans. He says: We have heard much of the motto, "Remember the Maine." If we are satisfied that the Maine was blown up from the outside we have a right to remember her with indignation; but without more conclusive evil-nce than we now have, we are not right if we charge criminality to persons. Therefore I conceive that the motto, "Remember the Maine," used as a war-cry would not have been justifiable. I should like to make the point here, as I have made it elsewhere, that this great and free country, with its education, good intention, and universal moral influence, may go to war to punish, but not to revenge. Improperly applied, the motto, "Remember the Maine, "savors too much of revenge, too much of evil for evil; but it may be used in an entirely worthy

During the recent war with Spain about seventy-five men were killed and wounded in the United States payy. Only fifteen were killed. On board the Maine two hundred and fifty-four men were killed outright and others died later-more than seventeen times as many as were killed in the Unite ! States navy by the Spanish land and naval forces during the entire war. In the way that the men of the Maine died and suffered there was enough of the heroic to provide a sound foundation for the motto, "Remember the Maine." Let me dismiss the prevailing impression that this motto was used in the United States navy, in the recent war, as a battle-signal. No United States naval vessel has entered into action flying the signal, "Remember the Maine." I am glad that it can be stated; yet one may excuse many mistaken expressions of the heat of action.

To this the editor of The Century

It may be said on the authority of Captain John B. Bartlett, during the war, chief intelligence officer of the navy: "The signal, "Remember the Maine,' has never been displayed on a United States man-of-war or by the army or navy, with one exception. A signal quartermaster(an enlisted man of the coast signal service hoisted the signal from the station at Port Fads. at the mouth of the Mississippi, when a transport loaded with troops was parsing out to sea. In reporting the passing out of the transport, as was his duty, the quartermaster added to his message to headquarters the fact of display of signal, which was received with great enthusiasm by the troops. He was severely reprimanded by return message over the wires.'
